Joseph M. Lauweryns, M.D., Ph.D.
Professor ordinarius in Microscopic Anatomy & Pathology
Experimental Laboratory of Cardiopulmonary & Genital Pathology
Department of Pathology
Vesalius Institute
University of Leuven
12, Minderbroedersstraat
B-3000 Leuven
Belgium

The Lymphatics of the Lung: Their Role in Fluid Transport and Clearance of Airborne Particulate Matter in Normal and Experimental Conditions and in Various Lung Diseases.

The morphology of the pulmonary lymphatics and their role in pulmonary fluid transport and airborne particulate matter and in various lung diseases will be investigated, using light optical and electron microscopical methods.

Activation Date: January 1, 1975

Current Grant Level: $27,016.

1005075509

Source: https://www.industrydocuments.ucsf.edu/docs/qzmk0000